Browning, who presided, presented Mrs. Frank H. Merrill for the soprano with the audience joining enthusias-tically in the chorus. The solo, Arm. Arm. Ye Brave, from Handel's Judas Maccabeus, was finely rendered by the rich baritone voice of Charles D. Geer. The accompanist was Frederick W. Lester.

After the Scripture reading by Pres ident Browning and the prayer by Dr. Lewellyn Pratt, General Secretary Frank H. Merrill made the announcements, while the collection was taken. This was followed by the soprano solo, Lead, Kindiy Light (Shepperd), exquisitely rendered by Mrs. Frank H. Merrill.

Speaker Greeted With Applause. Speaking briefly of three prominent facts for which we have reason to remember Lincoln, viz.: His saving of the union, his part in freeling the slaves, and the worthy example he left President Browning presented Principal Clifton H. Hobson of the Greeneville school to introduce the crator of the afternoon, Hon, Robert E. Luce of Somerville, Mass.

Mr. Hobson's flattering introduction of Mr. Luce as an orator worthy of the occasion, and one who, like Lincoln, was a laborer for the common people, prepared the way for a burst of ap-plause which greeted the speaker as he arose, and which was redoubled at he conclusion of his admirable ad-

Snowdrop In Bloom.

In one garden in town a snowdrop is in bloom, a promise of spring, not-withstanding the "cold wave coming."

It specifies the speaker characterized Lincoln as the mainstay of the republic through the four years of battle days, amid the derision, the scoffing and the jealousy of those who could not understand their leader. It was during these times that the mystical nature of the president developed and he seemed to reflect the very spirit and life of the people from which he time that the true type of erican. He represent the characterist of the people from which he deviates the true type of erican. He represent the characterist of the people from which he deviates the true type of erican. He represented the na-tional characteristic of sadness, yet the keenest enjoyment of true humor, he represented our love of physical prowess, and he was a lover of the pleasures of companionship, a lover of men, yet shy and diffident. Like the American, he was indifferent to dress, but a man of true courtesy and chartity and a tender heart yet so stem in.

The transfer was made by Mr. Smith ty and a tender heart, yet so stern in ime of necessity that he could issue hose commands that he knew would send thousands to death upon the field. Above all he was of the loftlest patri-otlem, the many-sided Lincoln, who

He was not what we would call today a regular churchgoer and from this we may gather some respect for those who do not feel it necessary to give this public expression of their raith. But the Bible was the com-panion of his early life, and he came to a realizing sense of the responsibil-ities of man to his creator when the duties of the presidency were thrust upon him and to a Springfield audience he declared his reliance in a di-

We know but the result, that he was taken away, and has left us his imperishable memand has left us his imperishable memory. Such a service this afternoon and such a life would be idle if there were no lessons from it for us. Lincoln achieved greatness by the mastery of his surroundings and of himself, he lived that the supremacy of law might be established. Obedience to law is the safety of society. In his day it was a question affecting constitutional law, in ours it is upon statute and law, in ours it is upon statute and common law, that there shall be special privileges to none. Roosevelt and Lincoln, Today we see a president of the United States, about to go out of of-fice, and reviled, vilified and scoffed at because he has given much of his iffe to this principle of obedience to aw. Inspired by our recollections of the great Lincoln, who suffered much of the same scoffing and villification, may we not perchance imagine that we of this generation have attempted under great generalship to do our share to obtain something of this obe-dience to law and are we not to be thankful that the Greator has set
